About this records creator:

Authorized Heading Saskatchewan Historical Society , 1936-1951

Brief Bio./Admin. History The Saskatchewan Historical Society (SHS) was a non-profit organization incorporated in 1936. Centered in Regina, the Society worked to preserve Saskatchewan's documentary heritage. The Society collected personal papers; investigated and marked historic sites; corresponded with libraries and other organizations and encouraged the establishment of local branches throughout the province. The SHS was dissolved on October 5, 1951.

Biographical Sketch/Administrative History The Saskatchewan Historical Society was established in 1936 by individuals interested in preserving Saskatchewan's documentary heritage. The Society was incorporated on May 11, 1936 in accordance with the provisions of The Benevolent Societies Act. The first general meeting was held in Regina on June 22, 1936. The Society's head office was located in Regina, first at the Regina Normal School and then in the McCallum-Hill Building. The Society's primary source of funding was the Government of Saskatchewan.

The Saskatchewan Historical Society collected and compiled various materials relating to Saskatchewan's history, especially prior to 1882, and made the information available to interested parties. Standing committees were established to deal with specific aspects of Saskatchewan history, including church history; political history; farmers' movements; colonization and immigration; native groups; education; early exploration and the early history of the City of Regina. The Society collected personal papers and pioneer reminiscences; investigated and marked historic sites; corresponded with governments and organizations; answered enquiries and encouraged the establishment of local branches throughout the province.

Membership in the Society was open to honorary and regular members. Officers included a president; first, second and third vice-presidents; and a secretary. The Saskatchewan Historical Society was dissolved on October 5, 1951.

AN INVENTORY OF THE RECORDS OF THE
SASKATCHEWAN HISTORICAL SOCIETY

Saskatchewan Archives Board, Regina
1994

1845-1946

The Saskatchewan Historical Society was established in 1936 by persons interested in preserving Saskatchewan's documentary heritage. Originally funded by a government grant, the Society collected and compiled various materials relating to the history of the province, especially prior to 1882, and made the information available to interested parties. Records collected focused on church history, political history, farmers' movements, colonization and immigration, native groups, the North West Mounted Police, education, early exploration, historic sites and the history of Regina.

The Society collected personal papers, investigated and marked historical sites, corresponded with libraries, governments and other organizations, answered enquiries, and established local branches throughout the province in an effort to facilitate historical research in Saskatchewan.

This collection contains material collected by Zachary Hamilton, who was appointed Secretary of the Saskatchewan Historical Society in 1936. The material predominately dates from the mid-1930's to 1945 although copies of many earlier records are included in the files. Newspaper clippings, personal narratives, essays, articles and Hamilton's correspondence with various parties form the bulk of the collection. All of these sources relate to aspects of Saskatchewan history from the mid 19th century to 1945.

The records were acquired by the Saskatchewan Archives Board upon its creation in 1945.

The arrangement of material follows the original organization of records by the Society and is largely grouped by subject. An incomplete preliminary list was referenced during the completion of the finding aid.

Since the records were already processed and classified under the old "SHS" collection designation, numerical designations were maintained in the listing. Documents are listed at the item level in instances where documents on several subjects were contained in a single file, and at the file level where records related more generally to a specific topic. The format adopted for this inventory does not include the extent of each item or file.

No subject index is available in the finding aid, although the files SHS 68 through SHS 240 are arranged alphabetically by subject. In addition, main card entries and cross-references refer the researcher specifically to files within the collection. These cards are accessed by subject.
